chat chaos

Premise

A LIVE gameshow for grown kids. Contestants are competing for a prize but the games are all nostalgic childhood party games.

SET: IN-STUDIO WHITE CYC

The games will exist in an all white void (similar to balloon pop shows or Hot Ones).

the chat is in control of the secret Chaos Points which award contestants with extra points that run parallel to winning the games. Example: "The next person to clap" or "who ever scores the least" gets a Chaos Point. The contestants are not aware of the Chaos Challenges until the points are given.

Winning the actual game is 3 points, and every Chaos Challenge is 1 Point each.

one week show

Premise

Who's Line Is It Anyways meets America's Got Talent. A team of 5 influencers/streamers have to perform in a weekly talent show. The catch is - they're performing random skills given to them by the audience.

They have one week to learn it and perform it LIVE!

Breakdown

Every week the chat is given the opportunity to not only judge the talent show, but also give the contestants their next skill challenge. The skill challenges are fun- things like "Learn how to MIME" or "Tap Dancing". The contestants then order what they need for the challenge off of Amazon (ex: MIME outfit or tap shoes), and stream their learning process throughout the week on their personal channels. Fans can follow their individual journeys before seeing the final show live in-studio.

The challenges range from magic, dancing like the Les Twins, ventriloquist, breakdancing, ballet, write a funny song, bodybuilding, interpretive dance, tap dancing, juggling, unicycle, ninja/karate demonstration etc

In studio, we can have the host interact with each contestant and talk about how their week of practice went (they can even show clips of their streams). Audience votes who has the best performance LIVE, and then chooses their next challenge at the end.

IRL EVENT STREAM

living vicariously

or

bring the chat

Premise

Host streams his experience at a live event – Mixes Man on the street format with Live Stream Experience. The chat lives vicariously through the streamer by choosing where they go in the event.

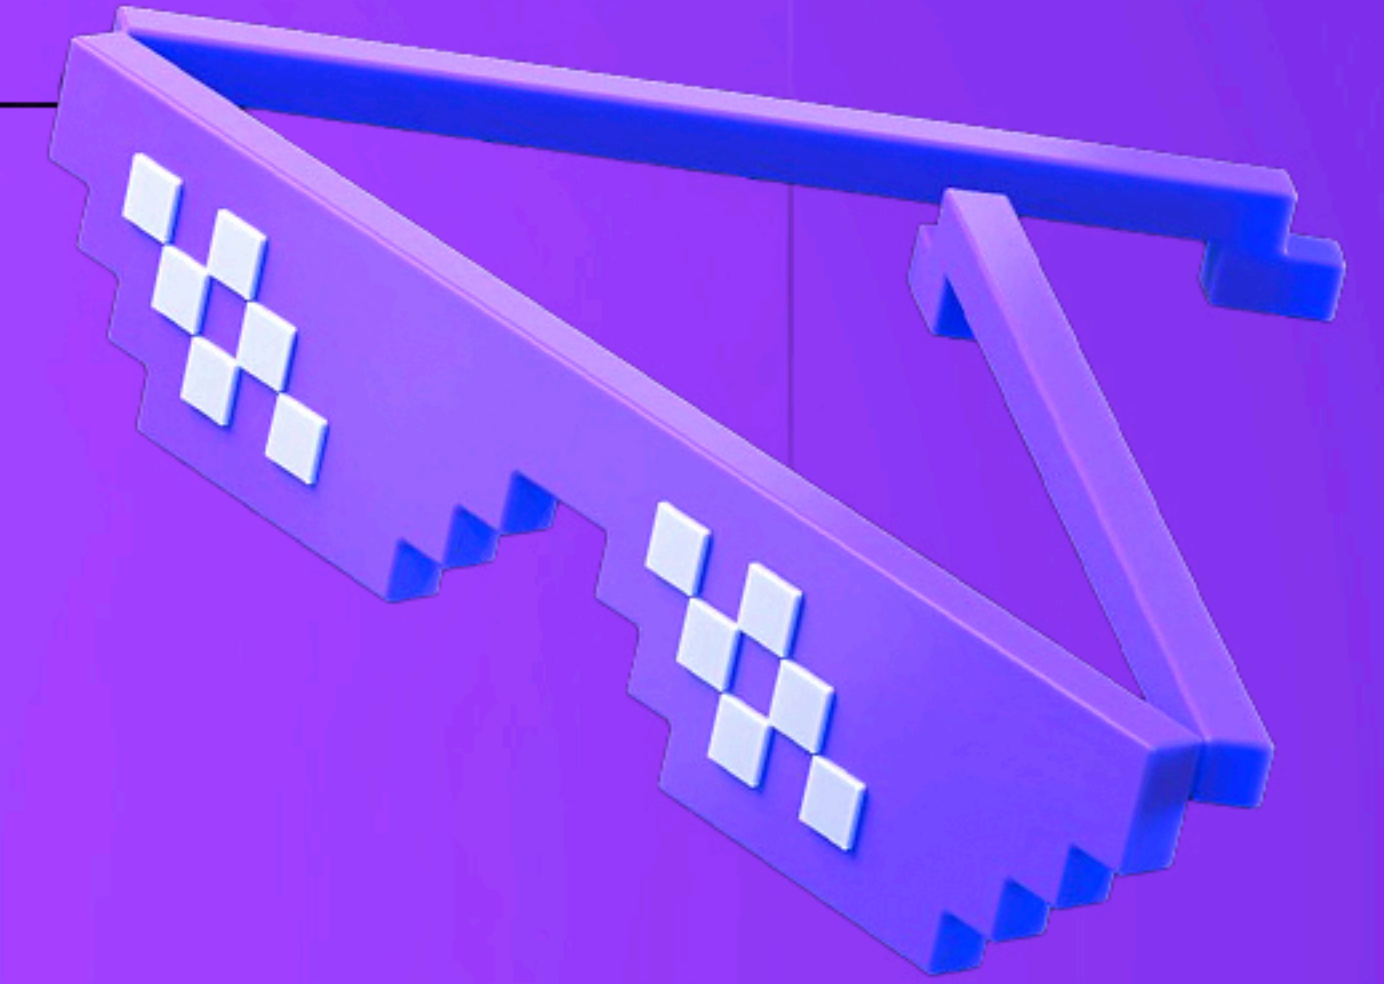

We break down the event into different stops/stations (example: photo op, dance floor, backstage, custom activation, green room, food vendors, bar, etc) We create a graphic that resembles an amusement park map and customize it to fit the opportunities at each event. The chat will then have the opportunity to vote on which stop to go to next. We can even add fun achievements that can pop up (like if the chat tells the host to go to the dance floor and bust a move, an achievement can pop up when they eventually do it.

Host can also speak to different guests of the event and get a rundown of their experience (as well as where they're from and why they're there). Then we give them a quick trivia question about the culture of the event (example: for an event like Comicon the trivia will be about certain comic IP activations that are there). We can even give out a funny/unique prize and take a pic with them at the end of each interview.

The stream can be edited and mixed in with the man-on-the-street questions (done earlier in the day) to give the viewers frequent breaks from the live wandering experience.

We can also show the other side of the event- the backstage experience w/ crew and one of the event planners/high level management- green rooms and a peek behind the curtain into the planning/show running of the event.
